

STUDENT DATEBOOK IMPLEMENTATION

A NEW BEGINNING

Each new school year offers an opportunity for a fresh start, a different approach, a chance to make a change. This is true for everyone who is a part of the educational setting.

Administrators have the chance to institute programs that will build morale, develop positive faculty and staff involvement, provide for an environment that contributes to higher scores, and guide student successes.

Teachers make plans to actively engage their students in the educational process; they embrace the possibility of setting a tone in their classrooms that encourages creative thinking and active learning. They approach each new year with the same enthusiasm that made them choose education as their life's work.

Students, too, imagine the possibilities: improving their class rank, raising their grade point average, graduating on time (or a semester early), moving into the world of work, improving their chances of being accepted into a college or university, earning a scholarship, becoming the kind of student they know they can be.

Parents will gladly take the challenge of supporting their child or helping to provide for a productive school year. Parents realize that a new school year is a chance to make a difference in the life of their child, to help their child succeed, to lay the foundation for a productive life.

"The art of teaching is the art of assisting discovery."

~ Mark Van Doren

Everyone is busy, probably busier than ever before in a society that is multi-focused.

There are jobs that require more than the designated 40-hour work week; family commitments that require time, energy, and emotional fortitude; social obligations that may or may not be relaxing; and personal goals that need time and attention. In the process, a giant juggling act ensues, a juggling act that may or may not be successful.

Students are not natural-born jugglers. They do not inherently know how to organize; they possess very few innate time management skills.

They need to be taught how to handle the time commitments in their world: extracurricular activities and dates with sports, dramatics, band, musical performances, club activities; community involvement involving church, service organizations, church youth groups; personal activities with friends and family; part-time jobs; family responsibilities.

Proper training in the use of a datebook will help students achieve their goals efficiently and effectively. Not only will a datebook help them organize their daily schedule, but it will also help them achieve the specific educational goals as well.
